ndie films, including "Brightwood" and "All My Presidents" which he was able to view with a live audience at the Seattle International Film Festival with family and friends. His last film, "Different Drummers," won Best Family Picture and screenplay at the WorldFest Houston in 2014.

He recently wrapped up "Strange Nature," a full feature where he played Brody, the lead on location in Minnesota. Jonah's last movie project was a coming of age film entitled Girl Flu shot here in Los Angeles and he is currently in negotiations for a role in a film directed by Akiva Goldsman (A Beautiful Mind and DaVinci Code).

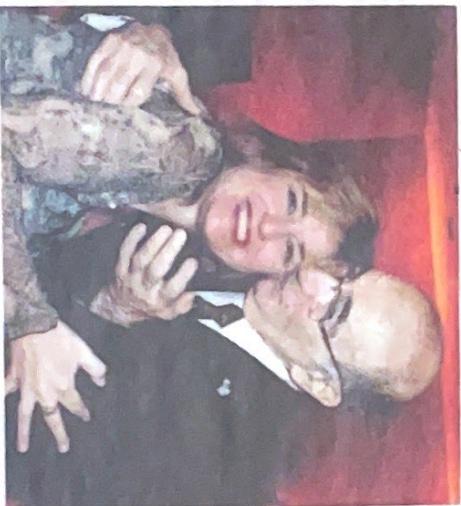

Studio City resident and 12-year old actor Jonah Beres, who attends Millikan Performing Arts Magnet School in Sherman Oaks, is starring in the world premiere play "Corktown '57" at Odyssey Theater through May 3. The young thespian honed his chops in theatre productions in his native Seattle and signed with a talent agent in 2010. His first full feature, A Bad Summer for Tomatoes, which is still in production, found him acting beside his sister, Simone. Beres then worked on five

The Los Angeles Jewish Symphony (LAJS) kicks off its 2015 season on Sunday, April 12th with "Jewish Music Encounters." Maestra Noreen Green and the Los Angeles Jewish Symphony String Ensemble will play a program will include the premiere of Canopy of Peace by Russell Steinberg, dedicated to the late Rabbi Harold M. Schulweis.

Maestra Noreen Green shares, "Rabbi Schulweis was a tremendous influence on my life. For twenty years I absorbed his teachings while working beside him at Valley Beth Shalom as his music director. He was awe-inspiring. I feel a huge void in my heart, since his passing. Presenting his words through music just a few days shy of what would have been his 90th birthday will be an honor befitting his memory."

Dr. Noreen Green is the LAJS Founder, Artistic Director and Conductor and a renowned lecturer on Jewish music, and an accomplished educator. For two decades, she served as Music Director for Valley Beth Shalom Synagogue in Encino and currently serves as their Music Scholar in Residence.
